EMERGING LEADERS PROGRAM

New Edition

Today's challenging context calls for multifaceted Automobile Club leaders who can spot emerging opportunities, who can navigate in difficult economic environments and who have a holistic view of the role of their Clubs, from servicing their members to advocating for road safety.

FIA University Emerging Leaders Program (ELP) helps talented young individuals master new skills and develop new leadership styles—transforming them into outstanding leaders who can implement projects having a direct impact in the future of their Automobile Clubs.

The FIA University ELP builds on the knowledge, experience and diversity of the FIA family. By developing leadership skills and providing a broader strategy, innovation and advocacy perspectives, FIA University helps clubs groom the next generation of Automobile Club leaders.

Mr. Jean Todt,
FIA President

"Unlike big corporations, the FIA is not a homogenous entity, but rather a federation of sport and mobility clubs with varied interests. We want to help our clubs be stronger in these times, indeed challenging times, by giving them access to the best strategic capacity building education. Initiated as a Mobility project, I do think there is a real potential to extend the FIA University into the work of our Motorsport Clubs."

Who Should Attend

The FIA University ELP aims at attracting dynamic, energetic participants keen to drive their Automobile Clubs forward. Typically, high potential executives who can make it to the first line, or recently appointed first line executives with little or no club experience.

Ms. Susan Pikrallidas,
Secretary General FIA Mobility

"This FIA University course was a great way of building on the knowledge, experience and diversity of the FIA family."

"The FIA University Emerging Leaders Program offers a unique combination of top university teaching, a tailor made program for Automobile Clubs and international exposure with club executives from all over the world."

Mr. Thierry Willemarck,
FIA University Mentor

Key Takeaways

By the end of the FIA University Emerging Leaders Program (ELP), participants will:

- Gain relevant knowledge and acquire a management toolkit to make the transition from a successful individual contributor to a leader of teams, projects or wider club initiatives.
- Combine increased self-awareness with a greater appreciation of the part you play within the Club as a whole. This will enable you to have a greater impact on others and to make things happen outside of the immediate scope of your role.
- Fast-track impact at your Club through the development of a hands-on project that has an impact on your Club's future/performance.

Program Content

The program focuses on three key elements:

- Developing self-awareness. How do you see yourself and how do others see you? Developing a critical understanding of yourself and the impact you have on other people is key to becoming an effective leader as you progress in your career.
- Building a relevant Automobile Club skill set. What are the value drivers of your Club and what is your contribution to them? At this stage in your career, you need to understand your contribution to the broader strategic objectives of your organization and be able to develop innovative solutions that deliver value in your environment.
- Delivering results. How do you increase your influence and impact? Young managers tend to succeed through sound technical skills and strong motivation to get the job done themselves. Making the transition to a management role requires a step-change in performance and the ability to make things happen through other people.

Program Structure

Prior to the start of the program in Barcelona, participants will receive Pre-Program materials consisting of preparatory readings. The 4.5 day program will be followed by a Post-program phase in which each Club will develop an individual project.
