2016 FIA FORMULA ONE WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP™ • Key F1 Regulation Changes

QUALIFYING

Qualifying continues to be one hour of on-track action broken into three parts – a Q1 period of 16 minutes followed by two further sessions of 15 and 14 minutes respectively for Q2 and Q3.

The key change is the introduction of elimination of drivers. This happens, once the session has started, every 90 seconds.

In detail:

Q1 (16 minutes):

- After seven minutes, the slowest of the 22 drivers is eliminated
- After this, the slowest driver is eliminated every 90 seconds until the chequered flag to end Q1
- In total, seven drivers are eliminated and 15 go through

Q2 (15 minutes):

- After six minutes, the slowest driver is eliminated followed by one more every 90 seconds
- In total, seven are eliminated and eight progress

Q3 (14 minutes):

- After five minutes, the slowest driver is eliminated followed by one more every 90 seconds
- This will mean two drivers are on track to contest pole position in the final 90 seconds before the flag

ENGINES

This is year three of F1s 'hybrid' turbo-charged era, aimed at extracting high performance from low consumption.

F1 powertrains include the following:

ICE – Internal Combustion Engine: 1.6 litre V6, maximum 15,000 rpm

ERS – Energy Recovery System

TC – Turbocharger

CE – Control Electronics

After some difficulties in 2015, more 'tokens' for power unit development will be available this year. A total of 32 tokens will be allowed for use by manufacturers in an effort to help those struggling to make development progress.

In another change, cars are required to be designed with a separate waste-gate for exhaust gases. This has been dubbed the 'screamer' pipe because it is expected to herald a return to more noise.

TYRES

Tyre supplier Pirelli has introduced a fifth tyre compound known as 'ultrasoft' designed for use on street circuits. Pirelli will bring three dry compounds to races this year instead of two – two 'choice' compounds and a third to be made available to the top ten qualifiers for Q3.

Hamilton heads clear of the chasing pack • 2015 Race Report

Lewis Hamilton and Arnold Schwarzenegger had Albert Park rocking with laughter when they met on the victors' podium following the 2015 Formula 1® Rolex Australian Grand Prix.

After a few minutes' banter, that delighted thousands of fans, they united to utter the Hollywood star's trademark line. "I'll be back".

"Hey man, Wow!" was Hamilton's greeting when he set eyes on Schwarzenegger, "It is an incredible feeling to continue winning," he added. "But it is also great to be up here with you... I thought you were taller!"

"Well, I'm not wearing my high heels," the original terminator responded.

After world champion Hamilton's flawlessly destructive drive to victory in the season-opening race it was impossible to tell just which of them really was The Terminator.

Starting from the 39th pole position of his career, the Briton dominated the race and snuffed out his rivals' hopes with an almost imperious ease on his way to his 34th victory. It was Hamilton's seventh win in eight races stretching back into the previous season and the Mercedes team's 30th Formula One victory. It was a clear signal of what lay ahead for the rest of the year.

To do that, however, he knew he had first to overcome a motor racing terminator at the top of his game, such was Hamilton's imperious superiority.

His Mercedes team-mate, former race winner and championship runner-up German Nico Rosberg, came home second to confirm the team's 12th one-two finish in 12 months.

Four-time champion German Sebastian Vettel, finished on the podium in his Ferrari debut and was clearly intent on leading the fight against Mercedes – a task he stuck to throughout the season.

Williams' sole starter Felipe Massa took fourth ahead of star rookie Felipe Nasr, who gave Sauber their first points since 2013 on his Formula One debut.

2015 was a race of attrition that saw only 11 cars take the chequered flag. Williams' Valtteri Bottas was ruled out of the race thanks to a back injury and Manor Marussia failed to qualify.

The 17 expected starters became 15 before the lights went out when McLaren's Kevin Magnussen and Red Bull's Daniel Kvyat both experienced car failures en route to the grid.

Further incidents on the first lap accounted for Lotus's Pastor Maldonado in a bruising contest that ended in laughter. It was a sign of the times.

Dan Ricciardo suffered the indignity of being lapped by the Mercedes right at the end, but at least took eight points for Red Bull after dropping back from challenging Nasr to finish sixth.
