HUNGARORING

Classical. This is what it has become over the past years, the race track of Hungaroring. It was built more than three decades ago as a rarity of its time, for being the first one beyond the Iron Curtain, and now it is still special as the third behind Monte-Carlo and Monza to have continuously featured in the F1 race calendar.

Hungaroring is preparing for a great event, the 33rd Hungarian Grand Prix this year, and for this occasion perhaps a little nostalgia is allowed, recalling the victory of Nelson Piquet at the first race held here – in front of more than two hundred-thousand (!) spectators. We also remember how Nigel Mansell (who always celebrated his birthday at us and once got a horse called Skala as a present) lost a wheel nut and with it the race itself, even though he had started from pole position in 1987. Damon Hill's bad luck is also memorable, when in the final lap, due to a technical problem victory slipped his hands (1997), just as the great battles fought on the asphalt between Alain Prost and Ayrton Senna. Jenson Button's rainy victory (his first) is just as much the part of the race track's history as Michael Schumacher's four or Lewis Hamilton's five Hungarian victories respectively.

The track is dusty, and the race is hot – this is the most often heard remark from those speaking about the Hungarian run. Then immediately added: one of the most challenging races of the season from the pilots' point of view. To win on this tricky, tortuous track that hardly offers any straights is an enormous achievement, which took Sebastian Vettel 9 years to conquer, though being one of the most talented drivers of our time.

Now it is history but at that time it was a fantastic achievement (and quite unparalleled in the world) that Hungaroring was built within a mere eight months, so that on the 10 August 1986 the First Hungarian Grand Prix could take place. The total length of the circuit was 4014.76 meters. The race track has been reconstructed twice since then, first in 1989 removing chicane nr.3 from the trackline (the length of the track was 3972 km), than in 2003. This latter brought a more significant change: longer finish straight, modified 1st and 14th corners and a total track length now is 4381, 44 m. Hungaroring has by now developed to serve as a centre of motorsports, all those interested in the sports can find adequate possibilities and one can choose from the following options: Test Course for Driving Technique, Hungaroring Off Road Park, Hungaroring Gokart Centre, Hungaroring School for Racing Training.

Among the many modern race tracks built in a uniform style, Hungaroring represents an older tradition, the classical style that has gained extra value for now. It is really popular with the drivers and the teams. „The valley, the environment is beautiful and the proximity of the capital is a great attraction to everyone. As for the track... In 2016 we put new asphalt on the track as a first step of improvements”, says Zsolt Gyulay, president CEO of Hungaroring who is a two-time Olympic champion, still amazed by the professionalism demonstrated by the teams. As he says, the reason why it is excellent to work with the field and staff members of Formula-1 is that they are quick to take up the pace.

„Everybody is highly disciplined here, as basically the whole of motorsport is. Also it demands professionalism to know that we play a part in one of the most, or perhaps the most viewed race series of the world, which means obligations for the drivers and the hosting countries alike” Gyulay adds.

Back to the Hungarian Grand Prix once more. It must not go unmentioned that our race has never been in danger in the past decades, what is more, once (in 2002) it won the prize of Run of the Year, that was received at the season closing gala of the international association.

An organic part of the race track’s history that on Hungaroring, as the first Hungarian, Csaba Kesjár (who unfortunately later died in a tragic racing accident) drove a Formula 1 car in 1987, testing Zakspeed, and also here was the first run of Formula 1 of Zsolt Baumgartner’s career (2003 – Jordan), who got the great opportunity after the accident and injury of Ralph Firman, and then he had a contract for a full season with Minardi in the following year.

At the moment there is no Hungarian driver in the Formula-1 world championship series, yet in the racing calendar the Hungarian Grand Prix with its decades long history still plays a significant role, and will continue to do so based on our contract until 2026.
