

last time out, Formula 1's teams and drivers this weekend head to Budapest for Round 11 of the 2021 FIA Formula One World Championship, the Hungarian Grand Prix.

After the high speeds and flat expanses of Silverstone, the twists and turns of the Hungaroring represent a very different challenge. Featuring flowing sections of closely linked corners, the tight layout provides a good test of car balance, and with aerodynamic stability accented, teams will bring downforce levels similar to those seen at Monaco earlier this year.

The lap one clash at Silverstone between championship leader Max Verstappen and Lewis Hamilton, and the latter's eventual victory, has served to close the gap between the title rivals at the top of the standings. Just eight points now separate the title rivals.

In the Constructors' battle, a meagre three points at Silverstone for championship leaders Red Bull Racing and a 43-point haul for Mercedes means the defending champions have cut the deficit to the Honda-powered team from 44 points to just four going into this weekend.

FAST FACTS

- This is the 36th FIA Formula One World Championship Hungarian Grand Prix. The race has been present on the calendar since 1986 with every event being staged at the Hungaroring.
- Dewis Hamilton is far and away the most successful driver at this race, with eight victories. He first won for McLaren in 2007 and then took two more wins with the British squad, in 2009 and 2012. He has since won five times for Mercedes, in 2013, 2016, 2018, 2019 and last year. He has double the win total at this track of the next man on the list, Michael Schumacher, who won for Benetton in 1994 and Ferrari in 1998, 2001 and 2004.
- Should Hamilton win the race on Sunday it would be his 100th career victory in Formula 1. If he does so he would also become the first driver to win a grand - prix on nine occasions. His eight wins here and in Great Britain currently tie him with Michael Schumacher who finished on the top step of the podium at the French Grand Prix eight times.

- There are four other Hungarian Grand Prix winners on this year's grid. Fernando Alonso took his maiden Formula 1 win here with Renault in 2003, Kimi Räikkönen won with McLaren in 2005 and Daniel Ricciardo won with Red Bull Racing in 2014. Sebastian Vettel is the only other multiple winner appearing this year. The German took wins with Ferrari in 2015 and 2017.
- » Apart from Alonso, three other drivers have taken their first F1 win here: Damon Hill in 1993 with Williams, Jenson Button with Honda in 2006 and Heikki Kovalainen in 2008.
- » McLaren are the most successful team

- at this race, with 11 victories. Alongside Hamilton's, they have won with Ayrton Senna, in 1988, 1991 and 1992, Mika Häkkinen, in 1999 and 2000, Kimi Räikkönen in 2005, Kovalainen in 2008 and Jenson Button in 2011.
- » Hamilton and Schumacher share the record for most pole positions at the Hungarian Grand Prix, with seven each. Schumacher scored one with Benetton in 1994 and then six with Ferrari, in 1996, 1997, 2000, 2001, 2004 and 2005. Hamilton has been pole three times with Mclaren, in 2007, 2008 and 2012 and four times with Mercedes, in 2013, 2015, 2018 and last year.
- Current championship leader Max Verstappen scored the first pole position of his career at the 2019 Hungarian Grand Prix. The Dutch driver has added seven more since.
