RED BULL RING – CIRCUIT DETAILS

The new Red Bull Ring complies with all current international safety standards. This means that every type of racing permitted under FIA (four-wheel) rules can be held there. Its length is 4.3 kilometers, and its routing is the same as that used from 1996 to 2003 whose layout was designed by the world's most famous Grand Prix track architect Hermann Tilke.

Part of what makes this race track attractive is the sloping terrain around it which creates a natural arena. Natural areas help solving the discrepancy between safety and the closeness of the spectators to the action in the best possible way. In the best spots, one practically sits above the race cars and can spot the drivers in their cockpits as they brake into and accelerate out of the corners which gives one the feeling of being part of the action; at most other tracks you are so far away you have to use binoculars. Certain places allow views of two thirds of the track, and it is not unusual to witness the now-rare spectacle of cars powersliding; the road surface lends itself to powersliding more than newly designed tracks. Since 2011, the Ring has welcomed many major top-class racing series such as the MotoGP and hosted many exciting races in various classes. The aim is to offer a balanced season programme with a mix of race events, presentations, testing and public activities.

FIVE DECADES FULL OF MOTORSPORT

At the Red Bull Ring, the smell of decades of exciting motorsport history lingers in the air. The Formula One races first took place at the Zeltweg airfield and then on what is now the Red Bull Ring. Jochen Rindt, Niki Lauda, Alain Prost, and Michael Schumacher all raced at top speed around this legendary track. Several turning points split the history of the famous circuit.

ZELTWEG AIRFIELD

The race held in 1963 on the military airstrip at Zeltweg was given the title “First Grand Prix of Austria” but did not yet have world championship status. That changed in 1964, as the following race in Zeltweg did have the world championship status.

ÖSTERREICHRING (1969–1995)

The opening of the Österreichring meant the end of the bumpy old Zeltweg airfield track, which the drivers had grown to hate. In 1970 it saw its first Formula 1 Grand Prix. What was exciting about that period was the contest to build Europe’s fastest racetrack, faster than the Hockenheimring and Spa-Francorchamps. During the final Grand Prix in 1987 pole-sitter Nelson Piquet’s time of 1:23.357 minutes around the 5.942 km track set an average speed record for the circuit of 256.621 km/h. Concerns about the Österreichring’s safety had reached a head in the mid-1990s, and it was completely rebuilt in 1995 and 1996.

A1 RING (1996–2003)

For safety reasons, the Österreichring was rebuilt by Hermann Tilke. Its length was reduced from 5.942 km to 4.326 km, and three narrow clockwise turns replaced fast and sharp turns to create space for overtaking. Seven Grand Prix races took place from that point onwards, some of which were fabulous, some of which patchy (team orders). 2003 saw the last Austrian Grand Prix on this track layout. After the end of the season, the diggers moved in to tear down part of the track.

RED BULL RING (2011–PRESENT)

Three years were spent working on updating and upgrading Spielberg. On 15 May 2011, the time had finally come – Projekt Spielberg officially presented the new Red Bull Ring to the world of motorsport. In June, the DTM became the first major motorsport racing series to thrill tens of thousands of motorsport fans at the Red Bull Ring. The championship has returned to the circuit every year since then. In 2014, after eleven years, Formula 1 returned to Spielberg.
